He will especially analyze how PC Marxism has altered American speech."

Post-Obama Democrats

From "The Democrats First 100 Days" by Matthew Continetti, FreeBeacon.com, April 28

What is the Democratic agenda? What does the party have to offer besides disunity, obstruction, incoherence, obsession, and obliviousness? They haven't rallied behind a plan to fix Obamacare or an alternative to the president's tax proposal. They seem dead set against enforcement of immigration laws, they seem opposed to any restrictions on abortion, they seem as eager as ever to regulate firearms and carbon dioxide. It's hard to detect a consensus beyond that. Banks, trade, health care, taxes, free speech, foreign intervention—these issues are undecided, up for grabs. (Please see PO Dems, page 2)

PO Dems

For eight years President Obama supplied the Democratic message, provided the Democrats answers to public questions. Now Obama himself is under fire for agreeing to deliver a $400,000 speech to Cantor Fitzgerald. He is already a figure of the past: His hair gray, his legacy under siege, his time spent lounging on Richard Branson's yacht or listening desultorily to Chicago undergrads. The energy is with Bernie, with the identity-politics movements, with the paramilitary "antifa" bands, and each one of these overlapping sects are outside the party establishment Obama represents.

Trump's Connection to Russia

After weeks of investigation it turns out that one of the people who attended Donald Trump's wedding in 2005 did have a connection to Russia. That person received a $500,000 speaking fee from a Russian bank tied to the Kremlin, before his wife helped decide whether to approve the sale to the Russian government of a company that held one-fifth of America's uranium capacity. Also, that same person controlled a foundation that received tens of millions of dollars from uranium investors before Russia's energy agency Rostatom secured the purchase of Uranium One. That person was Bill Clinton.
